Q: Are characters always added to the session? I had a car crash and am now trying to figure out how to build a car in my game. I want the crash to add a car to my session - so that when i get back to the game, the player has a car instead of a turtle. While its not possible for the car to login into the game, can't they be added to the session via a txt file? So that when the player gets back from the car crash, they're automatically there? (I'm not sure if this works...) A: Assuming you have a txt file saved to the assets directory... If you do not have a txt file, you can create one. Make sure you save it to the same directory. For a crash, you can create the car, spawn the player, then remove the car. For later, you can add the car to the session. This is assuming you do not have a separate login system. PHOTO BY ERIC FRANCIS At the top of the art exhibit titled "Dragon Ball Z in the ThunderCats" at the Comic-Con International in San Diego, author David Pakutner explains the history of Dragon Ball and Dragon Ball Z to the audience. The exhibit runs through July 31. The latest of thousands of Dragon Ball Z fans are flocking to Comic-Con in San Diego this year. After the second and final panel of the annual fan convention was held on Thursday night, hundreds of people filled the halls of the San Diego Convention Center, this year's venue, to view the "Dragon Ball Z in the ThunderCats" exhibit. The exhibit features more than 100 pop-culture pieces from the legendary Japanese Dragon Ball series, including posters, action figures and artwork. The exhibit was put on by Moebius Designs, a company that also put on a similar exhibit in San Diego last year. While the Dragon Ball Z exhibit has been showing in Japan since the 1980s, Moebius Designs hopes to reach an American audience through Comic-Con. "The response has been extremely positive," said Daniel Fallert, director
