In the case of bilateral thyroid tumours, hypercalcaemia or a family history of thyroid or breast cancers, a diagnosis of Cowden's disease should be considered. This syndrome usually begins in adolescence or early adulthood. The skin manifestations may include papillomatous or annular proliferations, leukoplakia, follicular nevi and papillomas. The mucous membranes may be oedematous and bleed easily. The eyes may be asymptomatic or may display exophthalmos, dryness and crusting. The oral cavity may show exophytic lesions, gingivitis and, later, telangiectases. The salivary glands may be enlarged. The thyroid may be enlarged and hyperplastic, and gastrointestinal tracts may be involved in the form of Meckel's diverticulum, gastric poly
