The interaction of the polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) 3,4,3',4'-tetrachlorobiphenyl (PCB-TE) and 4,4'-dichlorobiphenyl (PCB-D) with calf thymus DNA in solution, as well as with the cellular DNA in rat liver cells has been examined. Using both the covalent-reactive 2-acetylaminofluorene (2-AAF) and the non-covalent quencher 1,8-dinitropyrene (1,8-DNP), methods of detection, [3H]2-AAF was found to covalently bind to DNA and 1,8-DNP to non-covalently bind to DNA. However, in contrast to previous findings, no differences in the degree of DNA binding were observed using either binding system. The apparent binding constants determined from a competitive drug-binding method using both binding systems suggest that PCB-D binds more strongly than PCB-TE. The main binding site for PCB-TE is in the minor groove of the DNA helix, while PCB-D appears to bind to different DNA sites. PCB-TE is somewhat toxic to liver cells. The incubation of 3T3 cells, in contrast to PCB-D, resulted in a steep decrease in incorporation of [3H]thymidine into the DNA. In vivo, PCB-TE induces both positive and negative responses in several liver function tests

The Great Gatsby 3rd March 2014 Written by Daphne Silver In 1927, the rich and beautiful Catherine Guggenheim purchases and decorates the house on the Long Island beaches that was once the new home of her much younger and in love neighbors, the F. Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald. Catherine has a dream to live the life of the old Georgia O'Keeffe, their prominent neighbor across the street. The house however is haunted by the specter of her first love, Jay Gatsby. Catherine falls ill and hopes to see Jay one last time. Will she recognize him? Will he find her? Written by Daphne Silver Significant tumor-induced osteomalacia in a patient with a central giant cell tumor of bone. A case of pure central giant cell tumor (CGCT) of bone with multiple bony metastases was associated with the newly described histological tumor-induced osteomalacia (TIO). Bone TIO has been described rarely in cases of primary and metastatic bone neoplasms. We report a 36-year-old man with known multiple metastases from a CGCT of the proximal end of the right tibia who presented with multiple painful masses in the skeleton. Histologic, histochemical, and immunohistochemical examinations of the primary tumor and the bone tumors revealed the features of CGCT and pure TIO. This uncommon paraneoplastic disorder can be recognized by the typical histological features of TIO in a patient with multiple skeletal bony metastases from a primary neoplasm. Both the primary and metastatic lesions in this case of CGCT with TIO are enriched with tumor necrosis factor alpha, suggesting an immune-mediated destruction of the osteoblastic cells. This is the first documented case of bone TIO in a patient with CGCT of bone and the first case of pure TIO induced by CGCT. The value d0c515b9f4
